The Japan Epidemiological Association is an academic society established in 1991 to promote the exchange of ideas and discussion among members, as well as the development and advancement of epidemiological studies. The number of Society members reached 1,947 on July 1, 2016, about 8-fold increase over the 243 at our inception. The importance of epidemiology is increasingly recognized in other fields, including clinical medicine, pharmacy, and nursing, among others.
